

Q1. What are Reporting Tools?

A. Reporting tools are applications that help in generating structured reports from raw data. Examples: SSRS, Tableau, Power BI, Crystal Reports, Cognos.

Q2. Why are reporting tools used?

A. They are used for data visualization, decision making, KPI tracking, and to convert raw data into actionable insights.

Q3. Difference between static and interactive reports?

A. Static reports are fixed and pre-generated, while interactive reports allow filtering, drill-down, and dynamic analysis.

Q4. What are paginated reports?

A. Paginated reports are pixel-perfect, print-friendly reports where data is spread across multiple pages, often used in invoices, bills, and regulatory reporting.

Q5. What is a dashboard in reporting tools?

A. A dashboard is a collection of interactive visualizations and KPIs that provide a real-time overview of business performance.

Q6. What are KPIs in reporting?

A. Key Performance Indicators are measurable values (e.g., sales growth, profit margin) tracked using reporting tools to monitor business success.

Q7. Explain ad-hoc reporting.

A. Ad-hoc reporting allows end users to create their own reports on the fly without developer involvement.

Q8. Difference between OLAP and OLTP in reporting context?

A. OLTP is for transactional operations (insert/update), while OLAP is optimized for reporting and analytical queries.

Q9. What is drill-down reporting?

A. Drill-down allows users to click on a summarized data point (e.g., sales by region) to view more detailed levels (e.g., sales by city).

Q10. What is drill-through reporting?

A. Drill-through opens a different detailed report when clicking on a data point, usually with additional parameters.

Q11. What is a dataset in reporting tools?

A. A dataset represents the data source query results (e.g., SQL query, stored procedure output) used in a report.

Q12. What are parameters in reporting tools?

A. Parameters allow users to filter reports dynamically, such as selecting a date range, region, or product category.

Q13. What is a data source?

A. A data source defines the connection information to databases or external files from which the report fetches data.

Q14. What are report subscriptions?

A. Subscriptions allow scheduling and automated delivery of reports via email, file share, or portals.

Q15. What is a reporting server?

A. A reporting server hosts reports and provides access control, scheduling, and centralized report management.

Q16. What is conditional formatting in reporting?

A. Conditional formatting applies different styles/colors based on data values (e.g., highlight negative profits in red).

Q17. Difference between operational and analytical reports?

A. Operational reports track daily business (e.g., invoices), while analytical reports track trends and performance (e.g., quarterly sales trends).

Q18. What is real-time reporting?

A. Real-time reporting fetches live data from transactional systems to provide up-to-date insights instantly.

Q19. What is ETL and its role in reporting?

A. ETL (Extract, Transform, Load) prepares data from multiple sources into a data warehouse for reporting.

Q20. What is data visualization in reporting tools?

A. Data visualization represents complex data in charts, graphs, and dashboards for easy understanding.
